

TO THE WOMAN

To the woman whom society has told she can be seen but not heard.

To the woman who has defied society and has chosen to be seen and heard

To the woman who has been labeled rebellious because she decided to thrash the labels.

To the woman who has been called strong willed and over ambitious because she dared to chase her dreams.

To the woman who against all odds chose the road less traveled by leaving the abusive and dehumanizing marriage.

To the woman whose life is hanging in the balance as she brings forth another life.

To the woman on chemotherapy and other kinds of treatments.

To the woman who has been denied her rights because of her gender.

To the woman who tries to juggle it all together.

To the woman who lights the candle for other women.

To the woman who has been the provider but hides under the cloak of a dependent.

To the woman whom no one believed when she tried to name and shame her abuser.

To the woman whom diaper bag, talcum powder, wipes has become her new reality.

To the woman who prays all night and still wakes up early to prepare the children for school.

To the woman whose unpaid care work has never been appreciated.

To the woman who is yet to find her purpose.

To the woman who has to put up with the philandering husband and all kinds of mistresses.

To the woman who has been body shamed to obscurity.

To the woman who is at crossroad of destiny.

TO THE WOMAN.....You are loved and you are enough.

Author: Irene Ndidi Ugbah